Spanish learning in english

Question: Where should I learn Spanish in Spain? Answer: Many people come to Spain to learn Spanish. Although the Spanish you learn in Spain is different from South American Spanish, if you learn Spanish in Spain, you will be understood in any Spanish-speaking country you visit. See also: If you come to Spain to learn Spanish, the longer you spend in the country, the better. Although a two-week course will give you a better grounding than you could get in months for evening classes at home, a stay of three to six months is the best way to understand the language well. So you have to choose your city wisely. The most popular cities where you can learn Spanish are Madrid, Barcelona, Seville, Malaga and Salamanca. One of the most important things to find out is: Does the region you visit speak Spanish as the first language? There are a number of regions where this is not the case: Catalonia Exact numbers are hard to find, but about half of the people living in Barcelona in Catalonia prefer to speak Catalan over (Castilian) Spanish. The proportion is even higher outside the city. Valencia Some Valencians speak Valencian, a dialect of Catalan (although some dispute its status as a dialect). The region, known as the Basque Country, which includes the autonomous community called the Basque Country and northern Navarre, speaks Basque, albeit to a lesser extent Catalan than the Catalans. Galicia The inhabitants of Galicia speak Galicia, which is closer to Portuguese than Spanish. Most people also speak Spanish, but they prefer Galician, especially outside the cities. Read more about languages spoken in Spain. Once you have checked, Spanish is the first language in your chosen region, it's time to think about what the accent is like. Accents in Spain vary wildly and some are easier to understand than others. What is the point of learning Spanish in Spain if you can't listen to conversations on the street to improve your listening skills? Some points to consider:Andalusia and Extremadura Many people speak with a difficult accent, drop letters, especially the letter 's'. This will be a good practice for visiting some parts of Latin America, but note that not all difficult accents are difficult in the same way! Galicia You not only speak a different language in Galicia, but also their accent in Castilian Spanish is hard. The clearest Spanish accents can be found in Madrid, Salamanca, Burgos and Valladolid. Next, you need to think about what you can think. Barcelona and Madrid, as the two largest cities, tend to be more expensive than other areas. Cities in Salamanca and Valladolid are cheap, but there is less to do in these places. Which brings us to our last question: What is there to do in each city? Spending three or six months in a city is something other than a short visit. They will be care less about the tourist attractions and more about the lifestyle in general. Is there a great nightlife culture? Do you become in contact with other foreigners (do you even want contact with foreigners?). These are some of the questions you need to ask yourself. The three most interesting cities in Spain for a foreigner are Madrid, Seville and Barcelona.100 activities in Madrid100 activities in Barcelona50 activities in Seville learn Spanish in a city in Spain So where do I recommend you to learn Spanish in Spain? In view of all these considerations, my first choice would be Madrid. (I wish I knew what I know now - I learned my Spanish in Seville). It has a clear accent, no regional languages to be satisfied with, and much to do. With so many people, including from countries, you might as well hide from contact with people from your own country as you might be. The only drawback is that it is a little more expensive than some parts of Spain. If you have strict budgetary considerations, Salamanca is an excellent option. It is a great way to experience different accents and see more of Spain! Their combinations are endless, but I would suggest the following for a stay of six to 12 weeks: First quarter in Salamanca Salamanca is cheap, it has a good accent and there are many schools. Get your head down and learn the basics here before moving on. More about a language school in SalamancaMid half in Madrid Madrid Madrid is Spain's liveliest city and it still has a great accent for learning good Spanish. It is a little more expensive than other cities, but you will save money in Salamanca and Seville to pay for your time here. Read more about a language school in Madrid.Last quarter in Seville Finish in Seville, which has a hard accent to get your head around. It's also an exciting city with a lot to do. More: Language school in Seville Although you could buy schools in each of these cities, the easiest way to learn Spanish in several cities in Spain is to attend a school with several branches. Don Quixote schools have offices in Madrid, Salamanca and Seville, as well as at nine other locations in Spain. International House has offices in Seville and Madrid, but not Salamanca. With International House, swap Salamanca for Valencia. Thank you for letting us know! If you want to know why you should learn Spanish, first look at who is already: First of all, the inhabitants of the United States are learning a bunch that is not known for it, Monolingualism to conquer Spanish in record numbers. Spanish is also becoming increasingly important in Europe, where it is often the foreign language of choice according to English. No wonder Spanish is a popular second- or third-language language: with around 400 million speakers, it is the fourth most popular language in the world. World. English, Chinese and Hindustani) and the geographically most widely used after English. According to some counts, it has more native speakers than English. It is an official language on four continents and is of historical importance elsewhere. The numbers alone make Spanish a good choice for those who want to learn a different language. But there are many other reasons to learn Spanish. Here are a few: Much of the vocabulary of English has Latin nits, most of which came into English via French. Since Spanish is also a Latin language, you will find that you understand your local vocabulary better when learning Spanish. Similarly, Spanish and English have Indo-European roots, so their grammars are similar. There may be no more effective way to learn English grammar than to learn the grammar of another language by studying, because studying forces you to think about how your language is structured. Not too many years ago, the Spanish-speaking population of the United States was limited to the Mexican border states of Florida and New York City. But no more. Even states along the Canadian border, such as Washington and Montana, have their share of native speakers. Yes, it is quite possible to visit Mexico, Spain and even Equatorial Guinea without speaking a word of Spanish. But it's not nearly half as much fun. Among the real experiences that people have had just because they speak Spanish are to be invited to people's homes for dinner, to get texts so they can sing with mariachis, to be asked to translate for monolingual travelers, to take dance lessons without being part of a group of travellers, and to be asked to participate in a pick-up game of football (football) , among many others. Again and again when traveling in Latin America and Spain, doors will be open to you if you speak Spanish that are not open to most travelers If you can learn Spanish, you have a head start in learning the other Latin languages such as French and Italian. And it will even help you to learn Russian and German, as they also have Indo-European roots and have some characteristics (such as gender and comprehensive conjugation) that are present in Spanish but not in English. And it wouldn't be surprising if learning Spanish could even help you learn Japanese or some other non-Indo-European language, as intensive learning of the structure of a language can give you a point of reference for learning others. Spanish is one of the simplest foreign languages you can learn for English speakers. Much of its vocabulary is similar to English, and written Spanish is almost entirely phonetic: look almost every Spanish word and you can say how it is pronounced. If you're in the United States and you're working in one of the helping professions like medicine and education, you'll find that your opportunities are expanding with knowledge of Spanish. And wherever you live, if you are in a job that includes international trade, communication or tourism, similarly find ways to use your new language skills. If you are in international news, you will find it much easier to stay informed about developments in Spain and much of the Western Hemisphere if you know Spanish. There is a lot of interesting news – recent examples include anti-Uber taxi strikes in Bogotá and the impact of migration from Venezuela – that are little or no to be covered in the English media. Whether you like to speak, read or master challenges, you will all learn Spanish. For many people, it is naturally pleasing to speak successfully in another language. Perhaps this is one reason why children sometimes speak in pig Latin or develop their own secret codes. Although learning a language can be work, the effort pays off quickly when you can finally use your skills. For many people, Spanish offers the most rewards with the least effort of any foreign language. It's never too late to start learning. Learn.
